
Traveller, travelling and its conditions

source: silsilat ul-hudaa wa noor – the series of guidance and light - tape no. 247

Article taken and slightly adapted from: <http://asaheeha.wordpress.com>

بِسْمِ اللَّهِ الرَّحْمَنِ الرَّحِيمِ

Question no.2: Why did you complete (your prayer)? [The Shaykh was led in prayer during his journey, then the Imaam shortened but the Shaykh did not shorten (the prayer), so he was asked about that]

Shaykh al-Albaanee (رَحْمَةُ اللَّهِ)¹ answers:

“The matter of being considered a traveller, in my understanding, does not depend on crossing a fixed distance as much as it depends on two things, the foundation of which is the intention, and the other is leaving the city/country. So if there is the intention to travel, and he leaves the city/country, the rulings of travelling are applicable (to him); and after that, the distance that he crosses is not regarded, whether long or short. As for (if) the fundamental principle is not present, which is the intention, then this (person) who left (the city/country) is not a traveller even if he crossed a long distance or less or more, because travelling is one of the rulings that are linked with this hadeeth, about which some of the scholars of Islaam have said that it is a third of Islaam: ‘Actions are only by (their) intentions and every person will have only that which he intended.’² And the truth is that this is a very sensitive issue about which the views of the scholars have differed and they did not agree on something completely clear such that it would be possible for someone to say: ‘This is the truth, it is quite obvious, so leave the side issues off of me.’ No one can say this, but all that he can say is: ‘I chose such and such.’

So I chose – what I understood from the treatise of Ibn Taymeeyah (رَحْمَةُ اللَّهِ) regarding this matter. He has a special treatise about the rulings of travelling. Indeed he struck a very wonderful example, from which the researcher and student of knowledge understand that travelling has nothing to do with crossing a long distance over a short distance. As for (saying) that it has nothing to do with crossing a short distance, then I think this is not an area of debate, because it is established from the Messenger (of Allaah) (عليه الصلاة والسلام)³ that he (صلى الله عليه وسلم)⁴ used to leave from Madinah to al-Baqee’ (graveyard); then he (صلى الله عليه وسلم) would greet them (the dead) with the salaam, then return. He (صلى الله عليه وسلم) used to go out to the martyrs, to Uhud; he (صلى الله عليه وسلم) would greet them with the salaam, then return. He (صلى الله عليه وسلم) did not consider himself a traveller although he (صلى الله عليه وسلم) left the city. And the opposite of that as well – if he crossed a long distance, that does not mean that he became a traveller merely because of crossing this distance.

The example that (Ibn Taymeeyah (رَحْمَةُ اللَّهِ)) struck is as the following. He was from Damascus like me, and there are well-known towns around Damascus, so he struck an example with a city known up to this time as Duma. He said, if a man seeking game⁵ left from Damascus to Duma (which is) 15 kilometers (away) – there is no doubt that (crossing) this distance is (considered) travelling according to our custom if the fundamental condition exists, which is the intention to travel – (Ibn Taymeeyah (رَحْمَةُ اللَّهِ)) says that this man is not considered a traveller because he had left for hunting then for

¹ (رَحْمَةُ اللَّهِ) (rahimahullaah) May Allaah have mercy on him

² Saheeh al-Bukhaaree no.1

³ (عليه الصلاة والسلام) (alayhi as-Salaat wa Salaam) Upon him prayer and peace

⁴ (صلى الله عليه وسلم) May the peace and blessings of Allaah be upon him

⁵ animals hunted for food

Traveller, travelling and its conditions

returning. But what happened was that he did not find the game that he was looking for, so he continued on the journey, and continued and continued, and kept going on until he reached where? – Aleppo; and there are approximately 400 kilometres between Aleppo and Damascus today by car. (Ibn Taymeeyah (رَحْمَةُ اللَّهِ)) says this (man) is not a traveller – although he had crossed (many) distances of the traveller, not just one distance – because the first condition, which is the intention to travel, was not there in this person. Thus, we can say that a car driver leaves early in the morning from ‘Ammaan for instance to reach Ma’aan (then) to al-’Aqabah,⁶ returning by evening; this (person) is not a traveller because he, due to his work, does not intend to travel; rather he intends to carry out this work to make a living.

Therefore, regarding the subject of travelling, we must take into consideration the fundamental condition, which is the intention. And by us taking into consideration this intention, the ruling differs for two persons who cross one and the same distance, but one of them is a traveller and the other is not considered a traveller because of the difference in their intentions. And in this manner, there also occur rulings related to the ruling of residency, i.e. residency that is planned for a specific time. (For example), two men left a city, both as travellers; they landed in another city. The staying of one of them is that of a traveller (but) the other one is a resident. Why? Because (this second man) has another wife there, so he (goes) from one wife to another wife. Thus, because of there being a wife for him who causes him to be chaste, gives him a home and arranges his accommodations for him, he takes a ruling other than that of his companion because the situation differed in some ways.

Therefore, we learn of a very important conclusion, which is that the exact rulings of travelling differ from one person to another. So, we don’t assign to a person the ruling of another (person), and also the opposite likewise.”

⁶ these are all cities in Jordan